

CODE OF ETHICS

The following shall be a code of the ethics to which all members shall adhere:

- a) All members shall so order their professional conduct as to ensure fidelity to their employer, fairness to associate and subordinate employees, continuity and economy in the service for which they are responsible, and devotion to the cardinal principles of good citizenship, courtesy and personal honour.
  - b) He or she shall subscribe to the provisions of the Statutes governing and identified with his or her profession, respecting them and assisting wherever possible with their observation and enforcement.
  - c) He or she shall employ all honourable means to establish and consolidate in the thought of all coming within his or her sphere of influence, understanding and appreciation of his or her vocation.
  - d) He or she shall, by personal example and careful instructions, pass on to such as are worthy, knowledge of his or her calling to the end that true foundations may underlie a forthcoming generation of his or her kind.
  - e) He or she shall not use unfair means to gain vocational advancement for himself or herself, nor shall he or she jeopardize the position of others, when seeking to secure or retain employment.
  - f) He or she shall offer his or her services for prospective engagement at a fair and just rate of remuneration and shall decline to subscribe to any questionable practice in this regard.
  - g) He or she shall hold inviolate such confidential information as may be entrusted to him or her concerning the technical processes and business affairs of his or her employer.
  - h) He or she shall earnestly direct attention to such hazards and dangers to life and property as may be revealed in the pursuit of his or her calling, and be ever prepared to sacrifice personal and private interest in the greater service of safety.
  - i) He or she shall, by co-operative endeavour, diligently seek to enhance the status of all members, giving freely of his or her knowledge and skill to this and all other engineering societies dedicated to the high ideals of honour and unselfishness in the performance of a service vital to the well-being and progress of mankind.
- To promote business relations, social activities and mutual understanding among Power Engineers, to protect the interests and to assist in the advancement of the members, to co-operate in the interests of the Profession with other technical associations and with Municipal, Provincial and Federal authorities, to formulate and promote a professional code of ethics, and generally, to assist the Power Engineer in the discharge of his or her technical and civic duties.